The Manual Of Close Up

Much of the information in this book continues to be very relevant to close-up photographers. For example, the basic principals of magnification, lighting and exposure have not changed. Although cameras have advanced, it is very difficult to use auto-focus for real close-ups. Lefkowitz covers bellows, marco lenses and extention tubes well.

The basic set-up required for close-up photography apart from the obvious camera body is a lens with macro capabilities. These macro-capable lenses can come in the form of a (short/long) tele-photo lens with a close-up "filter", a standard zoom lens with macro mode settings or a specialized Micro Nikkor macro lens.

Beginner's Guide to Close-up & Macro Photography

Macro filters (also called close up filters) are filters that screw onto the front of a lens and act in a similar fashion to a magnifying glass. Placed between the subject and camera lens, the macro filter reduces the lens' effective focal length. This in turn decreases the minimum focusing distance of the lens and allows for greater ...

This sounds obvious, but try it. Set your camera up on a tripod, choose a subject (anything will do really) and get your camera up close to the subject. Switch your camera to Manual focus. You can try autofocus, but generally you will be able to focus a little closer on manual focus. If you are using manual focus, the tripod will be important.
