Germany had the best-trained troops at the start, IMO, but by the end they were a hollow shell of what they once had. Most other countries had pretty good militaries, but the Germans also had good doctrine that it took the Allies to catch up on. Allied armies got better as the war progressed, and Axis ones got worse.

Which country had the best army soldiers during World War ...

World War III probably won't happen but if it does and billions of people end up dead don't feel bad for them because dead people don't mind that they're dead. They don't even know that they're dead. They don't know anything. Anyway we've been through worse jams than this without starting World War 3. 9/11 didn't start World War 3.
